

As published in

Whether you realize it or not, your dairy has a culture. But is it a “culture of excellence” or a “culture of neglect”?

The latter means your farm neglects to declare acceptable animal care and handling standards and protocols. It neglects to provide necessary training and equipment so employees can do their jobs properly.

Culture has consequences. A culture of neglect opens the door for employees to come up with their own – potentially dangerous – solutions to unusual or difficult situations.

Take Away Tip:

Dairy culture has consequences

By Travis Thayer, D.V.M.
Dairy Technical Trainer
Diamond V

The Trusted Experts In Nutrition & Health™

Copyright 2015 Diamond V. All rights reserved.